Kai Tsu and her mother had a great trip to Washington, D.C. from Kerrville, Texas. They stopped along the way in Littlerock, Arkansas to see the Bill Clinton Library, in Memphis and Knoxville, Tennessee, in Arlington Virginia and elsewhere. To the left are some of the more than 700 pictures that Kai Tsu took while she was on her trip. At the upper left is the Marine War Memorial, which is a stature derived from a famous picture of a flag being raised on the island of Iwo Jima during the Second World War. Clockwise we find a night photo (I've lightened it up so you can see it), of a fountain with the Washington Monument in the background. Next is the Lincoln Memorial (see all the people going in and out?). And lastly is a picture of Kai Tsu in front of the U.S. Capital. If you would like to see the rest of the pictures, you can go to: www.proverbs15.com/2009DCTrip and you will be able to view them. Kai Tsu promised the people she was traveling with that the pictures would be on the internet, so I got to put them up there. The more important news (at least for me) is that she is back from her sister's house in Texas. So she has been home since last Saturday night. We are going to West Sacramento to see our grandson on May 1st, so I will not be in class when you read this newsletter. Kai Tsu is going to stay in West Sacramento for one month to help with little Algernon. I will be back next Tuesday, so I will see you on May 9th. I hope you have a great class while I am gone.

I was going to write on the Cinco De Mayo celebrations, but, because of the swine flu, I am not sure if anyone should or will go. Cinco De Mayo, which means the 5th of May, is a largely Hispanic celebration that celebrates the defeating of the French in the town of Pueblo with an inferior Mexican force. Although not universally celebrated in Mexico, it is celebrated in many places in America. Usually there is a large gathering at the Whittier Narrows Park in South El Monte with bands and picnics on the weekend near May 5th.

The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom, and knowledge of the Holy One is understanding. Proverbs 9:10

敬畏耶和華是智慧的開端；認識至聖者便是聰明。箴言 9:10
